Who can study for an RHS qualification?

Anyone who has an interest in plants and gardening can study for an RHS qualification. Although the qualifications are aimed primarily at those wishing to acquire the skills and knowledge to pursue a career in horticulture, the level 1 and level 2 qualifications are also ideal for keen gardeners who wish to develop their horticultural knowledge and skills.

Where can I study for an RHS Qualification?

Courses leading to RHS qualifications are offered by approved centres throughout the UK and Ireland. The courses are part time, usually offered as one day per week or as an evening class. It is also possible to study for the theory qualifications through distance learning.

RHS QUALIFICATIONS

RHS Qualifications is a nationally recognised awarding body offering a range of qualifications for professional horticulturists and keen gardeners of all ages.

The RHS offers qualifications that enable learners to develop their knowledge and skills and to progress, from the Level 1 Award in Practical Horticulture through to the Master of Horticulture, the Society's most prestigious qualification.

The Royal Horticultural Society has been awarding qualifications since 1893, and its qualifications are widely recognised and respected within the horticulture industry.

This leaflet outlines the range of accredited qualifications that are offered by the RHS awarding body. For more detailed information visit our website at
