NOTES ON NAMES

Double trouble - Diphyllum, Dyphyllum, Dyphryllum, Diphylleia

The hybrid generic name × Dyphyllum has appeared on the Juniper Level Botanic Garden website for the intergeneric cross between Podophyllum peltatum and Dyosma species, herbaceous members of Berberidaceae. While searching to ensure this was not a duplication of a prior generic name I came across the orchid genus Diphyllum Raf. listed in Willis' Dictionary (8th ed. 1973: 371) where it was equated with Diphryllum Raf. (1808), an obscure name for Listera R.Br. (1813). Being the later name, Listera was conserved over Diphryllum, although now it is often treated as Neottia subgen. Listera. Because Listera ovata, Twayblade, has usually a basal single pair of ovate leaves, I wondered if Diphyllum was a deliberate correction of Diphryllum. I asked IPNI superhero, Kanchi Ghandi (Harvard) for an opinion. He noted that in the protologue Rafinesque described the two lateral petals as "upright, setaceous bifid" and suggested that the Greek word phrix meaning, standing on end, bristling (as in goose bumps) was used in reference to these upright bristles. Hence the name would mean literally Di two – phry bristling – phyllum leaves, and consequently did not require correcting to Diphyllum, two leaves, particularly since the species cited was bifolium – Latin for two-leaved. My learned colleague Dr David was sceptical noting that there is not a grammatical way to get from 'phrix' to 'phyllum', since in Greek the letter 'x' becomes a 'g' in compounds not a double l. But that would depend on Rafinesque doing things properly*. The heading he used when describing Diphryllum was "New Genusses" which to me says it all.

Fortunately, Juniper Level website also used another name for the same hybrid, × Podosma, which seems a safer option and gets us away from seeing double. It also avoids confusion with Diphylleia, a genus sometimes included in Podophyllum.

Rhynchostylis gigantea* Nimit Group

This group of Rhynchostylis gigantea (Lindl.) Ridl. originated from a cross between a plant with flowers of purplish pink spotted tepals which are clearly visible on the adaxial side (most common colour form) and a plant with flowers of solid dark lavender-purple tepals which are obviously seen on both abaxial and adaxial sides (a rear colour form). Crossing between these plants yielded high percentage of plants belong to this group.

Plants of this group have flowers with lavender-purple blotches on adaxial side of their tepals. The labellum colour is solid dark purplish red on the adaxial side. Ordinary wild-type individual of Rhynchostylis gigantea have flowers with purplish pink to purplish red coloured spots on the white or near white sepals and petals. This group has flowers with distinct dark purplish pink to purplish red colour blotches on the adaxial side of tepals. Rhynchostylis gigantea Ruxaporn Group, on the other hand, has flowers with distinct wine/dark purplish red colour blotches on both abaxial and adaxial sides. Thus, Rhynchostylis gigantea Nimit Group can easily be differentiated visually from the ordinary or wild-type and the Ruxaporn Group. Registered by Suwarit Wannakrairoj; originated by Nimit Wattanarojuang, Thailand.
