Life after Genera Orchidacearum

Although this massive work reviewing our knowledge of orchid genera is now completed in six volumes, work to elucidate relationships between genera continues, with the consequence that adjustments to generic limits and names continue to be made. In an invited review, Chase et. al. (2015) enumerate and comment on recently proposed generic changes. Those which affect cultivated plants are listed here.

- Amitostigma is redefined to exclude Tsaiorchis, but include Ponerorchis.
- Calanthe is expanded to include Cephalantheropsis, Gastrorchis and Phaius. The alternative approach that would involve splitting Calanthe and recognising its former sections Preptanthe and Styloglossum at generic rank has been abandoned.
- Eulophia is still under review, with uncertainty surrounding acceptance of the recently proposed Paralophia.
- Maxillaria is once again accepted in an expanded sense to include Brasiliorchis, Camaridium, Christensonella, Cryptocentrum, Cyrtidiorchis, Heterotaxis, Hylaeorchis, Inti, Mapinguari, Maxillariella, Mormolyca, Nitidobulbon, Ornithidium, Pityphyllum, Rhetinantha, Sauvetea and Trigonidium.
- Chysis, which had been unplaced as to subtribe in earlier treatments, has recently been shown to be sister to Bletiinae. This is of interest as Chysis had been successfully crossed with Bletia (as registered in 1988), and more recently with Cattleya × Broughtonia.
- Cattleya araguaiensis is currently thought to be a Brassavola × Cattleya hybrid.

- Euchile has been retained within Prosthechea.
 - Hadrolaelia (the Brazilian rupicolous Laelia) and Sophranitis continue to be retained in Cattleya, although there is evidence that this has yet to be accepted by Brazilian field workers, since Hadrolaelia is accepted in the recent Kew publication, Plantas do Setor Noroeste da Serra do Cipó, Minas Gerais (Zappi et al., 2014).
 - Haraella is included in Gastrochilus, along with Luisiopsis, this latter genus somewhat uncertainly.

Pescatorea* vs. *Pescatoria

After consultation with the RHS Nomenclature and Taxonomy Advisory Group (NATAG), who also consulted with John McNeill, Royal Botanic Garden, Edinburgh, and Werner Greuter, Berlin Dahlem, it was agreed to accept Pescatoria as correct, while Pescatorea is regarded as an error.

Basically under the provisions of the ICN (International Code of Nomenclature for Algae, Fungi and Plants, 2012), Reichenbach's spelling of the orchid generic name Pescatoria, although named after Jean-Pierre Pescatore (1793–1855) is not correctable to Pescatorea, even although Reichenbach adopted that spelling (without explanation) on his third and subsequent usages of the name. Interestingly, this third usage (for P. wallisii in Gard. Chron. 1869: 710. 1869) was co-authored with Jean Jules Linden (1817–1898), who was apparently a friend of Pescatore.

The correct name for Lycaste skinneri

The name Lycaste skinneri Lindl., Edwards's Bot. Reg. 29(Misc.): 15 (1843) is invalid since it was based on Maxillaria skinneri Bateman ex Lindl., Edwards's Bot. Reg. 28(Misc.): 10 (1842) which is an illegitimate later homonym. Consequently, the next available name is Lycaste virginalis (Scheidw.) Linden, Lindenia 4: 22 (1888).

The correct name for a Central American Phragmipedium

There has been ongoing discussion as to the correct name for this plant in the literature for at least the past ten years. Much has been written by Guido Braem and colleagues in favour of the name Phragmipedium popovii, while other authors have favoured Phragmipedium warszewiczii or P. warszewiczii, P. warszewiczianum, or P. humboldtii. Pupulin & Dressler (2011) carefully considered all the arguments, examined the original publications and consulted with specialists in botanical nomenclature. They conclude that the name Phragmipedium humboldtii has priority and should be used. The full citation is Phragmipedium humboldtii (Warsz.) J.T. Atwood & Dressler, Selbyana 19: 246 (1998, publ. 1999).

Presenting orchid names with clarity

Confusion can so easily prevail if plant names are not clearly presented and, as this happens even in orchid journals and scientific papers, a few helpful guidelines are provided by the Registrar below.

What is an epithet?

Most plant names are made up of at least two parts: the genus, and an epithet which may be one of several different ranks. The use of the term “epithet” on the orchid hybrid registration application form sometimes raises eyebrows. In the English language an epithet is an adjective or phrase expressing a quality or attribute regarded as characteristic of the person or thing mentioned. In biological nomenclature, including plant names, it is the part of a name which follows the genus and serves to distinguish one particular entity at a given rank. Hence it might be a species epithet, such as amethystoglossa in Cattleya amethystoglossa, denoting the purple lip of this orchid species, or it could be ‘Nigrescens’ as in Cattleya aelandiae ‘Nigrescens’ indicating that this cultivar is distinguished by the sepals and petals being suffused with blackish-brown. In summary, in these two examples the genus name is Cattleya; the species epithets are amethystoglossa and aelandiae; while the cultivar epithet is ‘Nigrescens’.

Presentation of plant names

In the above examples you may have noticed that the botanical names, both genus and species, are presented in italic script, with the genus name commencing with a capital (upper case) letter, and the species epithet with a lower case initial letter. By contrast, the cultivar epithet is distinguished by non-italic script, an initial capital letter, and being enclosed in single quote marks (''). This is particularly important with the older Latin cultivar epithets, as if improperly styled they could be mistaken for botanical species or even grex epithets. Sometimes, if the context makes it obvious, the genus name might be abbreviated to a single capital initial letter or its standard international abbreviation as often used in orchid registration and show schedules.

Grex epithets are written like cultivar epithets but without the single quote marks. The word "grex" (or its contraction "gx") can be added after the grex epithet for clarity. In Calanthe Ruby 'Cooksoniae', Calanthe is the genus, Ruby is the grex epithet and 'Cooksoniae' is the cultivar epithet. The name for this plant could also be written Calanthe Ruby gx 'Cooksoniae' or shortened to Calanthe 'Cooksoniae' or Cal. 'Cooksoniae' provided that this would not be confused with any other Calanthe cultivar.

Grexes and natural hybrids

Some hybrids are known to occur naturally in the wild, and may also have been produced artificially in horticulture. Hybrids collected from the wild may be named botanically, such as Oncidium x adrianae, which is derived from Oncidium nobile x Oncidium luteopurpureum and was previously listed as an Odontoglossum. If the same two species are crossed in cultivation the offspring may be named as a grex, and in this case it is Oncidium Brandtia. Note that the natural hybrid name is written as if it were a species name with the inclusion of a multiplication sign to indicate its hybrid origin, whereas in the grex name the epithet is not preceded by a multiplication sign. In this example the natural hybrid has the rank of species, since both its parents are at species rank. Although the parentage appears to be identical in these two examples, the two names (the botanical hybrid and the grex) are not interchangeable because are they not equivalent; they are not coextensive. Why is this? More is involved than the origin of the hybrid. Each name is published under the provisions of a different code of nomenclature and each therefore represents a different biological concept.

A botanical species hybrid name applies to all the progeny that might be produced from any hybrid interaction between the two parental species and any of their offspring. It is so defined because in the wild a large hybrid population might consist of individuals of many different hybrid generations, including selfing of hybrid seedlings and back-crosses to either parent from several different generations. Thus, individual plants may have quite a complex origin and could resemble one parent more closely than the other, be intermediate, or display unique characters not present in either parent. In contrast, a grex name applies to only the hybrid between the two stated parents and subsequent selfed seedlings. A back-cross of the grex to either parent would be named as a different grex. Consequently, a grex is a much narrower concept, and within one botanical hybrid there might be many named grexes. Clearly they are not equivalent biological units.

The diagram below (Fig. 1) is an example of grexes included in the natural hybrid, Cattleya x dolosa

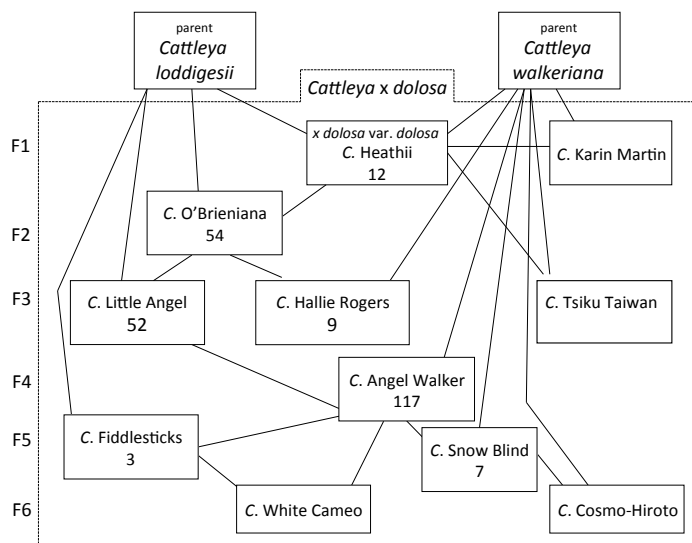

Fig. 1: Inside a nothospecies

(C. loddigesii x C. walkeriana). All the included grexes are derived from either the two parental species directly, or by back-crossing a hybrid progeny to one of its parents, hence they would fall within C. x dolosa. This breeding has now reached the F₆ generation. The numerals in each grex box represent the number of further grexes bred so far from the grex mentioned. All of these further grexes are outside the concept of C. x dolosa because they involve a parent which is derived from additional species. A further point of interest is that since C. x dolosa has the rank of species, all the grexes contained within it are below species rank, as are all their progeny. Hence the grex as used in orchid nomenclature is actually a multi-rank taxon, containing a mixture of species rank and infra-species rank taxa.

A generalisation frequently heard is that botanical names apply to wild origin hybrids while grex names apply to artificial hybrids. While that is often the case there are interesting exceptions. It is possible to give an artificial hybrid a botanical name, as for example Paphiopedilum × pradhanii, the hybrid of Paphiopedilum venustum × Paphiopedilum fairrieianum. This hybrid has also been named as a grex, as Paphiopedilum Pandion. Although both names are based on artificially raised hybrids, the same conceptual distinction in application of the names applies; the remit of Paphiopedilum × pradhanii is greater than that of Paphiopedilum Pandion. If Paphiopedilum Pandion was to be back-crossed to either of its parents, the resulting seedlings would require a different grex name, but still be within Paphiopedilum × pradhani.

Until fairly recent times orchid breeding and naming did not take these subtle differences into account. The same epithet was used for both natural and artificial hybrids of the same putative parentage, so that the hybrid of Paphiopedilum malipoense × Paphiopedilum micranthum is known as Paphiopedilum × fanaticum or Paphiopedilum Fanaticum. They are only distinguished by typographical presentation. Today, this practice of using the same epithet for a species and a grex of the same putative parentage is no longer permitted.
